Students deliver a two day (afternoons) event to the public and practicing high school teachers showing how forestry can support learning within the curriculum. Around 225 visitors engaged in the activities. The measure of success should be (and is) seen as the time spent engaged in the activities and resources in the lab, rather than the simple throughput of visitors and numbers counted. Comments both verbal and left in writing are relevant. We noted that on both days a number of family groups stayed in lab for 2+ hours.
