Offers grants to young people who would struggle to get training without some additional financial support.

By doing this we help young people between the ages of 16 and 26 to learn new skills and make their way into work. We cannot help if you are still in secondary education, studying for GCSEs or A Levels, or studying any other course that is not vocational.

Royal Forestry Society Bursaries

The Royal Forestry Society is committed to supporting individuals who wish to enhance their knowledge of trees, woods and sustainable forest management both in the UK and abroad. Thanks to the generosity of our donors and sponsors, we are able to provide a range of bursaries that subsidise or cover the costs for individual projects. Over the years, our funding has helped many people acquire new information about forestry and share their expertise with others.

In addition to our established bursaries, from 2015-16 we are introducing two important new awards: the RFS Viking Bursary and the RFS Future Foresters Studentships.
